THE BEST VARIETY OF CORN. 6,010

Cape corn, the corn that produced 99 bu. on one acre in 1913 is a big coarse, heavy, white, cobbled variety that has been grown on one farm for over thirty years. The two ears shown in the picture are representative of this variety. They measure 11 and 11½ in. in length and 7¼ and 8 inches in circumference, and each produced over one pound of shelled corn. This variety may not be able to hold the place it has won, but the corn that will win, will have many of these characters.

Several varieties have been produced in different parts of Southeast Missouri in the past that has had outstanding characters and were great producers, yet a lack of local pride or the belief that the other fellow had something better has caused these varieties, in many instances, to be entirely replaced by inferior ones. The new variety may have had straighter rows, better filled butts and tips, or a different indentation, but in the field they usually proved to be lacking in yield.

The Northern corn grower has taken his highest yielding varieties and with proper attention to depth of grain, length of ear and butt tips, etc., he has increased the yields of these good varieties. We can increase the yield of our best varieties in the same way. These show points are only a means to an end. Boone, Johnson, St. Charles, and other standard varieties of large white corn have been grown here so long that they are well adapted to our season and soil and if not leaders, they are setting a very high standard. Seed of these varieties can be obtained off local corn breeders.

One variety test or one yield contest will not tell us the best variety. A corn variety test should be run in every rural school district. There is no mystery or trick about such tests. Your rural school teacher is able to conduct a variety test and will do so if given encouragement.

Aere yield contests are being conducted in many counties by the county superintendent. The best way to get the benefit of such contests is to become a member. The State Normal School offers prizes in each county for highest yields and will be glad to enroll you in the 1914 contest, and send you the results of the 1913 contest.

I. W. W. Leader Gets One Year.

New York, March 30.—That no mercy will be shown by the courts to the I. W. W. army of unemployed "church raiders" was indicated here following the sentencing of Frank Tannenbaum, youthful I. W. W. leader of the mob which raided St. Alphonsus Roman Catholic church. Tannenbaum was convicted of unlawful assemblage by a jury in general sessions court and was sentenced by Judge Wadhams to one year in prison and to pay a $500 fine. The judge commended the jury upon its decision and told Tannenbaum that this country is the best in the world, but that "liberty does not mean lawless raids on churches."
